

“That’s not so bad, then,” Ginny said, smiling his way. “A week of lines, a few late nights doing homework — not the end of the world.”

“Yeah,” Harry agreed, though his hand still ached, and would no doubt feel a thousand times worse after a whole week of evenings like that.

He could handle it. He’d had worse.