

The first letter on Harry's list was to Bill Weasley.

Dear Bill,

Hope it's okay that I'm writing to you. You did say to keep in touch, after all. I expect the others have already told you about the tournament, but the champions get chosen tonight. From what I heard, the twins tried to put their names in, but they didn't get past the age line.

I was wondering something — you work for Gringotts, right? Do you know a goblin called Gorrak? I had some dealings with him the summer before third year, and I was wondering how he was doing. What exactly does a curse-breaker do? You said you brought home treasure — is all of your job raiding old Egyptian tombs, or do you ever break curses on people, too?

Hope you're doing well,

Harry

There. Enough of a hint for Bill to hopefully connect some dots — and enough that if Bill was in Dumbledore's pocket, he would go to the headmaster about it, and Harry would know soon enough. If Dumbledore thought Harry was aware of the curse on him, he'd no doubt start sniffing around.

He grabbed a second piece of parchment, thinking a little longer before writing this one.

Dear Charlie,

The secret is out; the tournament is almost underway. Are you planning to come watch some of it? Is that why you said you might see us sooner than expected?

It's a shame the tournament means quidditch is cancelled, though. I was looking forward to using some of the stuff I practiced this summer in a real match. I guess it'll have to wait until next year.

I'm curious — is the Ministry in Romania like the Ministry here? The Durmstang students are pretty quiet about where they're from and how things work, and I was wondering if all European wizarding communities were the same. Do they have a Wizengamot like we do? Are the seats inherited in the same way? No worries if you don't know, I just thought I'd ask. I've been looking into things like that a little more here, and I'd be interested to see if it's much different elsewhere.

Hope you're doing well,

Harry

If Bill and Charlie put their letters together, they could probably get a pretty clear idea of what Harry was really implying. Harry sealed the letters and tied them to Hedwig's leg, hoping both Weasley boys were still living at the Burrow for now. He didn't want to accidentally send her to Egypt or Romania!