

relationship of presencing media to communicable divine agency in the Hebrew Bible. I will also highlight the productivity and robustness of the theoretical frameworks developed in the book and discuss their applicability to other aspects of the study of the Hebrew Bible, as well as the study of deity beyond the Hebrew Bible. A brief appendix following the conclusion will also discuss the relevance of the messenger of YHWH and the divine name to early perspectives on Jesus's relationship to the God of Israel.